STAYING VIGILANT IN THE FACE OF FRAUD

Arizona takes election integrity seriously so our citizens can trust the outcome of our elections. From paper trails to random audits the state's laws, policies and procedures do an excellent job to prevent fraud and any manipulation of the vote.

The fundamental philosophy of our office is that it should be easy to vote but hard to cheat. While Arizonans have a fundamental right to a fair election, we must also have a process that voters feel is free from fraud.

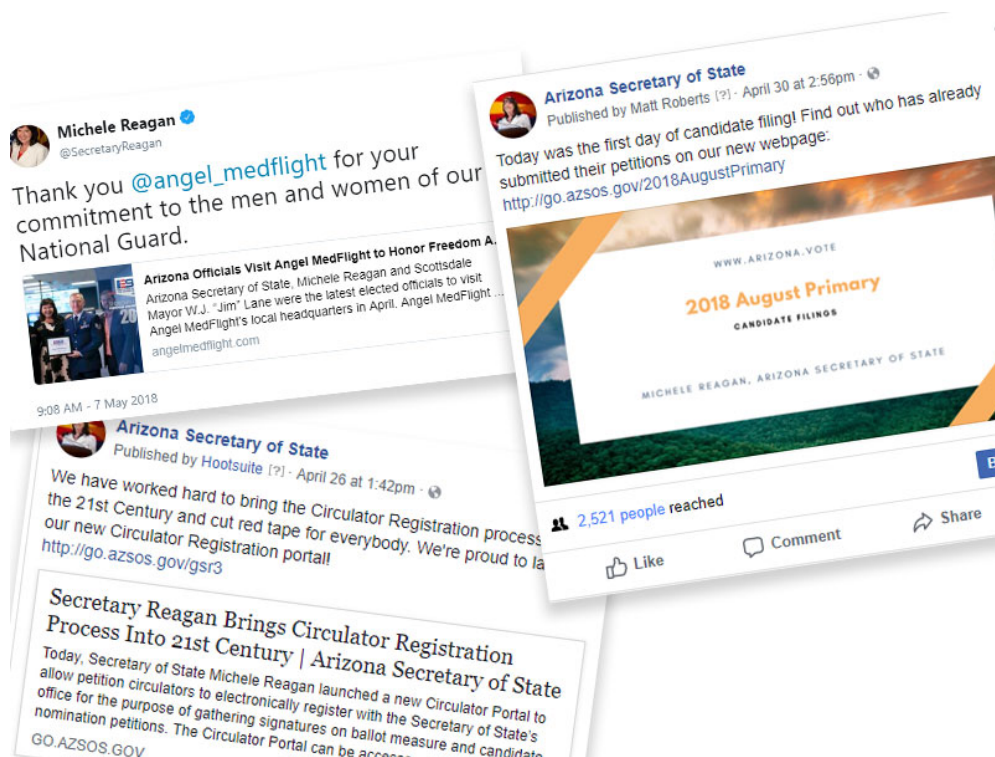

Each county performs Logic and Accuracy tests on 100% of their equipment before each election. In statewide elections, this is followed by our office, which performs its own test on a random sample of the equipment. If the test is successful, the election can proceed.

Once approved, tabulation equipment is sealed, kept under video surveillance and access is limited to certified election officers.

Within 24 hours after the election, a hand count is conducted from a random sample of early ballots and precincts to ensure the accuracy of tabulation equipment, and perhaps most importantly the law requires counties to retain ballots for more than two years in case a full recount should be ordered by the courts.

ARIZONA AUTHOR SERIES: LAURA TOHE

The Navajo language helped win World War II, and it lives on in this book, as the Code Talkers remember the war and reflect on the aftermath and the legacy they will leave behind. The veterans, able to speak to a daughter of one of their own in English and Navajo, truly shared from their hearts. They not only provided more battlefield details, but they also reveal how their war experiences affected themselves and the Navajo generations that followed.

Join author Laura Tohe as she discusses her work and the process of research. This free talk is part of our 2018 Arizona Author Series, hosted from February--July by the Arizona State Library, Archives and Public Records, a division of the Arizona Secretary of State.

DOZENS OF LIBRARIES AROUND STATE TO RECEIVE GRANTS

Secretary of State Michele Reagan has announced $800,000 in grants throughout the state for various library projects.

“Libraries are listening to their communities and creating programs to meet the needs of the population,” said Secretary of State Michele Reagan. “In addition to their traditional services, libraries are transforming, offering not only books, but adding programs to educate and engage all ages through customary, digital and social means. The libraries receiving awards this spring reflect the transformation taking place in libraries statewide.”
